SUBMARINE BASE NEAR NEW YORK

Secretary Daniels Announces Headquarters for Undersea Boats at New London and Discusses Naval Plans.

Washington, Sept. 4.—Secretary of the Navy Daniels, back yesterday from a visit to New England yards, talked of plans for improving the submarine service. Among other things, he announced the establishment at New London of a shore base for submarines. This has been recommended by Captain Grant, who has general supervision of submarine service.

In establishing this base, care has been taken to locate it within easy distance of New York, Boston and other large cities. In case of war it would be possible for submarines to use the base and then start out to cover approaches to New York and all the big north Atlantic cities.

Moreover, in establishing this base the navy department is taking a leaf out of the German plans for having land bases for their submarines. That larger appropriations for submarines and aeroplanes than last year are to be asked of Congress was made plain by Secretary Daniels. He is not ready to name the amount.

The last session of Congress allowed about $13,000,000 for submarines and $1,000,000 for aeroplanes. This will be largely outstripped.

That the United States is abreast of Europe in submarine development so far as known was declared by the secretary. He said the submarines at the Fore River yard built for a foreign power for delivery after the war. He said the American L boats were of the same type.

At Portsmouth the government is building a submarine and is ahead of schedule. Besides, it is building it for less than estimated. The only unsolved problem of magnitude is a suitable engine. The North Carolina has been sent to Pensacola and will remain for training work in connection with aeroplane service.

Secretary Daniels will soon talk with the president over the naval construction programme and naval expansion.

EFFECTS OF THE WAR

On British Soldiers Returning After Peace Is Discussed.

London, Sept. 4.—Englishmen discuss perhaps more frequently than any other war subject the question "What influence will the experience of our soldiers in foreign countries have on social conditions in our insular island?"

The soldiers, constituting a big proportion of the male population of the nation, will return after having sampled life in Belgium, France, Egypt, India, the Dardanelles and elsewhere. In most cases their daily intercourse with the foreign peoples is very intimate, and a large proportion of the soldiers who return will come back with a fairly easy command of a new language, with new thoughts, and new requirements.

A contributor to a small English trade paper, writing from the front, says: "I am under the impression that when Tommy comes marching home again he will expect lots of things he had not been used to before he began to travel on the continent. And not only in the way of food; with regard to drink, he will have got so out of the habit of standing up for a trifling matter that he will insist on only patronizing those public houses that give him little tables to sit round and chairs to sit on."

"I notice him through the open windows and doors of the places in which he takes his ease, and it is extraordinary how quickly he has picked up the foreign fashion of discussing his liquors, and has got out of the habit of bolting them, wiping his mouth, and coming out all in five minutes. Which is a capital thing, and I hope that in the peaceful years ahead our English publicans will see to it that temperance is served and pleasant company secured by adopting the cafe system our Tommies have dropped into so naturally."

Touching on the same subject, the Daily Telegraph says: "Yesterday those soldiers were just ordinary civilians, perhaps a trifle nervous in their outlook; tomorrow they will be men who have seen grim things, acquired strange knowledge, and learned in the school of experience just what is wrong with things as we do them. They will probably retain throughout their lives a suggestion of the newly gained discipline of mind and body, a respect for order in their daily surroundings. Their criticisms will not reveal themselves at once, for at first everything home-like will be welcomed, but in course of time they may be expected to review their experience and bring their freshly acquired knowledge to bear on the old conditions in their native land."
